Vermont's Travel Information System

Vermont's Travel Information Council, a citizen policy-making board in State government, is removing all off-premises outdoor advertising signs from Vermont's highways to help maintain the natural beauty of Vermont's countryside. Travelers will find a comprehensive Travel Information System has been put into effect consisting of the following elements:

Local Chambers of Commerce are located in many Vermont communities, with manned offices or booths. A list of these locations appears below.

Vermont Visitors Handbooks, containing details on the facilities offered by 383 Vermont traveler-oriented businesses, can be obtained from Local Chambers, as well as this...

Official Vermont Transportation Map, containing historic museums, golf courses, campgrounds and ski areas. These maps, highway route numbers and town destination signs will guide you between towns. Once you reach the desired town...

Official Business Directional Signs replace billboards for services available in that town and advise you of the number of miles to your hostelry or other service. These signs are located just before road junctions which require you to change direction from one numbered highway to another, except where at congested intersections and other important locations, and on our interstate highways at rest areas, these signs are replaced by listings on...

Travel Information Plazas, from which are dispensed the area...
Travelers Services Guides, pertaining to the section of Vermont in which the dispensing plaza is located. These Guides provide directions to businesses which are listed on each plaza where the Guide's dispenser is located. On these Travel Services Guides, Travel Information Plazas are depicted by a red 'V'. On this Official Vermont Transportation Map, these information plazas are indicated by a red 'V'. On the highways of Vermont, look for Travel Information Plaza approach signs bearing these symbols.

Sunrise in Glover by Norman Maciver

For much of its 159 mile length, Vermont nestles serenely between the Connecticut River to the East and Lake Champlain to the West. But its soft wooded hills and rolling farmlands can be deceiving, for Vermont has strength. And nowhere is that strength better exemplified than in the Green Mountain Range. Forming a virtually unbroken mountainous spine from Canada in the North to the Massachusetts border, the Green Mountains have become a winter and summer playground for travelers and native Vermonters alike. It is truly the backbone of Vermont.

Other lesser mountain ridges and monadnocks cover the length and breadth of America's 48th most populous state. Indeed, one quickly realizes that Vermont's charm and enduring magnetism is the happy result of its largely unsettled landscape, like a green jewel in the Atlantic Seaboard's crowded megalopolis.

Vermonters are aware of the importance of the state's natural beauty; not only as a major asset to the tourist industry, but as the supportive foundation to their way of life. Vermont is the first state to enact laws eliminating all off-premise outdoor advertising and it leads the country in forward-thinking environmental protection legislation.

There is much to be protected.

Nowhere in the world does Nature's changing of the seasons arrive with more enthusiasm than in Vermont. Four times each year, the whirl of weather and new activities turns the minds and hearts of young and old.

There are museums here, and art galleries, theaters, antique shops, movies and even a state symphony orchestra. But Vermont is really an outdoor state. Outdoors for things to see — outdoors for things to do.

In spring, the landscape is all pale fuchsia and lavender buds; there's fishing and late spring skiing and early planting and robins — the air smells clean and good. It's maple sap, syrup, sugar time.

Summer is unbelievably green — warm days, cool nights, hiking, golfing, camping, picnicking, riding, boating, tennis, sightseeing and luxurious swimming pools and boohood valley-stream rock ledge swimming holes.

The fall foliage, a riot of colors — background for a photographer's paradise. Hunting season, church bazaars, harvest suppers and pick-your-own apples. Cider fresh from the press.

Snow comes early but the skiers, snowshoers, snowmobilers, ski towers, sledgers and tobogganers are happy. Moonlight in Vermont is best on a new-fallen blanket of white.

Each season is so separate and distinct in Vermont, it's almost like being in four different countries. All are beautiful, all have much to offer and all share common boundaries, but to step into a new season opens up a new world of customs, attitudes and opportunities.

No wonder Vermont is known throughout the world. No wonder you will want to return again and again, for a Vermont vacation is a truly memorable experience.
